

The evolution of our society has led to an enhancement of the rights of consumers and users, especially those referred to the management of services considered to be basic or essential for people's daily life. An important part of these basic or essential services has evolved from its primary configuration as public services reserved for public administration to its current setup, in which are rendered by private companies under the regulation of free market. The liberalization of the management of activities considered to be essential can not diminish the rights or guaranties of consumers.

This process of liberalization and privatization of public services and activities means that the Administration is not the only entity to have public service duties, as certain economic private sectors have also these duties because of the activity they carry out. Avishai Margalit refers to civilized society and decent society. A civilized society is one whose citizens do no humiliate one another. A decent society is one whose institutions do no humiliate the citizens. The goal of a decent society, the one not humiliating citizens, is an essential part of our discussion.

In this new framework, the activities in private sectors that entail public service duties shall be monitored directly by the ombudsman, although it should be considered if the tools thought to oversee public administration could be used to monitor the private sector, in which the use of the same tools could entail interferences in the exercise of certain fundamental rights.

Being aware of this issue, IOI-Europe offers a seminar following the Catalan Ombudsman work and presentation in Stockholm 2009, and the Catalan and Spanish workshops held in Barcelona in 2011. Chaired together with Cercle d'Economia, wich is a private institution for promoting policy debate, the event will be participated by keynote speakers from the academic and ombudsman, public and private world.
